

East High
Rochester

STUDENT FARM SERVICE

Give impressions, suggestions, value and influence of your farm work on this sheet.

NAME Albert Veges

When I began farming, I possibly had the idea like many others that any man with a little experience and who was not afraid of work could run a farm. Since working for four months on a farm, my idea of experience has changed. It takes more than a little experience to farm it. The last condition concerning work is not altered but should, on the other hand, be underscored. A farmer in order to be successful must command an untiring amount of perseverance, must run his farm with the same wisdom and judgement that a manager manages his factory and above all must not be afraid of work.

Many people living in cities or towns who have no idea at all about how to farm it get the notion that the farm beckons to them. A man who has not patience and who has not given his whole heart to the work should never buy a farm. A good suggestion, I believe, for a man who is thinking of farming it, is to go out for a summer or a part thereof and come in personal contact with the work. In this way he could tell whether or not he would like farming enough to work a farm of his own.

The value of farming is twofold; value both physical and mental to the one who farms it and the value of production to the government.

The influence is very great. It gives a physical, mental and moral tone which can only be obtained by healthful out door work.

Albert Wegnes
East Rochester High School
Monroe County

Student Farm Service

Give impressions, suggestions, value and influence of your farm work on this sheet.

NAME Albert Wegnes East High Rochester

When I began farming, I possibly had the idea like many others that any man with a little experience and who was not afraid of work could run a farm. Since working for four months on a farm, my idea of experience has changed. It takes more than a little experience to farm it. The last condition concerning work is not altered but should, on the other hand, be underscored. A farmer in order to be successful must command an untiring amount of perseverance, must run his farm with the same wisdom and judgment that a manager manages his factory and above all must not be afraid of work.

Many people living in cities or towns who have no idea at all about how to farm it get the notion that the farm beckons to them. A man who has not patience and who has not given his whole heart to the work should never buy a farm. A good suggestion, I believe, for a man who is thinking of farming it, is to go out for a summer or a part thereof and come in personal contact with the work. In this way he could tell whether or not he would like farming enough to work a farm of his own.

The value of farming is twofold; value both physical and mental to the one who farms it and the value of production to the government.

The influence is very great. It gives a physical, mental and moral tone which can only be obtained by healthful outdoor work.