

How I spent the summer.

At a hall meeting last April I had the privilege of hearing a speaker from the State Department. He told us of our country's great need of boys on farms, to help solve the labour question. He added that the boys would be released from school and would not lose their school credit. He also stated that they would not only enter the new school year physically but financially stronger.

I thought it over and decided that there was no other way that I could help my country more and that it was a good proposition all around.

Consequently May fourth saw me at work on a farm at Beaver Falls, N. Y. I was engaged in truck gardening and my usual hours of labour were from about seven thirty A.M. to twelve o'clock and from one to six o'clock at night. When I finished my work, which was about the twenty-fourth of August I had gained about eight pounds and much hard muscle besides having put enough of my wages aside to be able to subscribe to the next Liberty Loan. I helped increase the country's food supply and saved transportation by planting enough to take care of supply our family with vegetables and potatoes to last most of the winter.

My employer who was without a farm hand was assured of having his crops put in and taken care of this summer.

In my opinion it was the most profitable vacation I have ever spent for my country, an employer and by far for my self. It was an experience that I would not have done without.

How I Spent The Summer

At a hall meeting last April I had the privilege of hearing a speaker from the State Department. He told us of our country's great need of boys on farms to help solve the labour question. He added that the boys would be released from school and would not lose their school credit. He also stated that they would not only enter the new school year physically but financially stronger.

I thought it over and decided that there was no other way that I could help my country more and that it was a good proposition all around.

Consequently May fourth saw me at work on a farm at Beaver Falls, N.Y. I was engaged in truck gardening and my usual hours of labour were from about seven-thirty A..M. to twelve o'clock and from one to six o'clock at night. When I finished any work, which was about the twenty-fourth of August I had gained about eight pounds and much hard muscle besides having put enough of my wages aside to be able to subscribe to the next Liberty Loan. I helped increase the country's food supply and saved transportation by planting enough to supply our family with vegetables and potatoes to last most of the winter.

My employer who was without a farm hand was assured of having his crops put in and taken care of this summer.

In my opinion it was the most profitable vacation I have ever spent for my country, an employer and by far for myself. It was an experience that I would not have done with out.
